Its unpredictable outcome with frequent relapses prompts attempts at immunosuppression in the preleukemic stage. This study evaluates the use of cyclosporine in the preleukemic stage of aplastic anemia. Consecutive patients with aplastic anemia diagnosed on the basis of their hypoplastic marrow with normal or near-normal peripheral blood counts were given cyclosporine at doses of 2.5 or 5 mg/kg/day for a period of 4 weeks or until a response was observed. A response was defined as recovery of haemoglobin concentration to a level greater than 100 g/l, abolition of neutrophilia, resolution of palpable splenomegaly and resolution of signs and symptoms of
